METHOD AND APPARATUS FOR DETERMINING CHARACTERISTICS OF A SAMPLE LIQUID INCLUDING A PLURALITY OF SUBSTANCES

Description

The present invention relates to the examination of liquids, especially of body liquids, such as urine, liquor, etc., or of liquid foods. More particularly, the present invention relates to the field of urine diagnosis.

Urine examinations are known in the prior art. Since they are non-invasive, they do not stress the patients and every increase in information from such examinations is of special commercial interest. At present, two methods of examining a urine liquid are substantially available. In the first method, test strips which are coated with up to 20 chemicals and which change their colors upon coming into contact with special substances are used. These test strips are dipped into the urine sample to be examined. Thus, without great expenditure, a judgment, which, however, substantially only is a qualitative one, because a certain threshold value of the substance to be determined must be present in order to trigger a change in color, can be achieved. In the second method, an infra-red spectrum of a urine sample, to which certain reagents may have been added before, is recorded and evaluated. However, devices which are capable of carrying out these infra-red spectrum analysis, require a considerable investment of about DM 200.000,00. ~~For this reason,~~ they are mainly used in hospitals. Both the technical requirements of the devices and the logistic requirements in order to bring several urine samples into a laboratory for a spectrum
